Carnival Rawi Hage

Rawi Hage's writing is dreamy, anarchist and historically rooted, irreverent, and lingers into magical realism -- his carnival existence, his flying carpet, Fly was born in a circus and his hard life landed him in a city we presume is Montreal, though he never names it, as a loner, a bibliophile, a solo-sex addict, and a taxi driver who cannot say no to a fare as long as he gets paid.

Book Review: Carnival, by Rawi Hage | National Post

In Carnival, internationally acclaimed author Rawi Hage takes us into the world of Fly, a taxi driver in a crime-ridden apocalyptic metropolis. Raised in the circus, the son of a golden-haired trapeze artist and a flying-carpet man, Fly sees everything, taking in all of the city's carnivalesque beauty and ugliness as he roves through its dizzying streets in his taxi.

Carnival revels in the written word, with a lust that mirrors Fly's own, for both literature and life. Hage has a unique perspective on the immigrant experience, crafting characters and situations that are both foreign and quintessentially Western. It's about the journey, not the destination, and the book is a joy to read.
