You are right: you need to get over that time. And you will do this by embarking on a strategy that involves you locking away those memories that continue to haunt you and celebrating all the good things that are happening in your life right now."

How can I get over THAT time in my life?

I isolated myself, terrifying thoughts running through my mind: I'm nothing. My life is over. I will never be able to show my face to the world again. All my years of hard work are wasted. With all my self-worth flushed down the toilet, my dreams gone, and embarrassed to the full extent possible, I was ready to take my own life.

This finding fits well with some of Roberts's prior research showing that people experience smaller, incremental personality changes over shorter periods of time. And it helps confirm his theory that personality change is cumulative over our lifespan, likely happens in response to our life experiences, and often leans in a positive, helpful direction.
